PhD thesis

Pavlopoulos, D. (2007). Wage Mobility Patterns in Europe. PhD thesis. Tilburg. ISBN: 978-90-5335-126-0.

Project and fellowship acquisition

- 2013/ 01 – 2013/ 12 and
2014/ 09 – 2015/10 “The effect of flexible employment on the labour market: a longitudinal approach”, project with the Observatory on Economic and Social Development – Labour Institute, Greek General Confederation of Labour. Role: principal investigator.
- 2011/ 03 – 2013/ 01 “The flexicurity gap: the effect of flexible employment on income and job security” [De flexicurity kloof: gevolgen van 3flexible werk voor inkomens- en werkzekerheid], joint project with KULeuven. In this project, we have acquired administrative data from Belgium to study the wage and employment effects of short-time work (in Belgium: tijdelijke werkloosheid) in the Belgian labour market. Role: principal investigator.
- 2013/ 09 – present “The flexible periphery around companies in the labour market” [De flexibele schil rond bedrijven op de arbeidsmarkt], joint project with Statistics Netherlands. In this project, we map all forms of flexible employment in the Netherlands and we investigate the trajectories of flexible workers. We also focus on the effectiveness of flexible arrangements (ie short-time work) in tackling the effects of the economic crisis. Moreover, we reconcile the differences in the size of flexible employment and in mobility from flexible to standard employment that emerge between survey and register data. Role: principal investigator.
- 2010/ 09 – 2011/ 07 Faculty Fellowship CCSS, Faculty of Social Sciences, VU University Amsterdam. Aim and means: 10% of research time financed to study the effects of flexibility in the Dutch and Belgian labour market.

Project participation
